

A

It has been quite the week for me. Being an Erasmus student made the progress of getting to know people and forming a team a bit more difficult, I'd say. However, I managed to find a group that I think will be able to work together for the project!

For me it felt like a lot of pulling had to be done by me this week. There was not a lot of communication between our team members and if there was it was mostly between 2 or 3 team members instead of the whole team. I tried to get everyone together and start bringing up topics we have to discuss as a team. I brought up topics like 'what kind of project do we want to make', 'where do we want our scrum board', 'who wants to start with the social contract'. It did make me feel a bit uncomfortable since it made me feel bossy and that's not something I want to achieve. Most of the time there were not a lot of ideas so I started pitching mine. It felt a bit like forcing everyone into my own ideas which is not really what I wanted to do since that also isn't the goal of working agile with a team.

This friday Tenzin and I also had a discussion about the structure we want to use for PR requests and unit tests, with the two of us we didn't really get to a mutual agreement so we are waiting for the other team members to give their opinion but that takes a while.

B

For me it would be great that the whole team starts to communicate with each other more naturally and also show a bit more commitment by not having to wait for replies for more than a day. Or bringing up stuff on the day of the deadline. It would also make me feel more comfortable if I don't have to be the pulling horse anymore.

It would also be amazing if we as a team can already get started with the implementation of our project somewhere next week. Every bit of extra time is always good!

A → B

I want to try and be a little less pushy and controlling and see if the rest of the team starts to pick up some of these things I have been doing. I will also try to bring up my point regarding availability and wanting to start the project in next week's stand up.